El Niño building, favouring South Island 🇳🇿

Hi all, and welcome,

There's a bit of a bite in the air, and the Aussie Alps picked up their first decent dusting yesterday. With the colder temps rolling in comes Grasshopper's first New Zealand Snow Outlook for 2026.

There's plenty to look forward to for winter 2026, with early outlooks pointing to an El Niño pattern that typically favours New Zealand's South Island.

That often means more regular snow-bearing systems through the Southern Alps, setting the stage for a strong season down south. While long-range forecasts can shift, this pattern historically delivers some of the most consistent snowfall for the region.

And as always in New Zealand, it only takes a few well-timed storms to really bring the mountains to life!

If you missed it a couple of weeks ago, The Grasshopper, has also released his first Australian Snow Season Outlook for 2026, to keep you clued up on the latest forecasts all across the Southern Hemisphere

Making First Turns Easier with the Epic Beginner Bundle!

Getting into riding just got a whole lot smoother for Aussie learners with the brand-new Epic Beginner Bundle.

Designed for adults starting out, it combines lift access, lessons and rentals across Perisher, Falls Creek and Hotham. Three flexible days on snow, built to boost confidence and get you hooked for the long run.

Why Jackson Hole is the Ultimate Family Powder Escape

Jackson Hole is famous for steep terrain and deep Wyoming powder, but it's also surprisingly easy with kids in tow. Easy ski-in, ski-out stays in Teton Village, relaxed beginner zones, world-class ski schools and off-snow adventures like elk sleigh rides through the snow. The kind of family ski trip that keeps everyone happy, on and off the mountain.
